Dear Sister - "a great pressure of business" has prevented me from not writing you any sooner. My part, the subject of which is, the effects of the late struggles in South America & Greece on Literature & Liberty, occupies all the time I can find exclusive of that devoted to the usual duties of college.
Should any of our family attend commencement, and I hope some of them will - it will be necessary for me to know how many, before the senior vacation. For our class is so large that all the good boarding houses will be engaged early -
I think now I shall spend all or a part of my senior vacation here. I have accepted an oration before the class to be delivered the morning after commencement. Henry Longfellow is to deliver a poem at the same time. The occasion will be so interesting - and the number of the audience so large that I think it my duty to make every exertion in my power to produce something worthy of both. Besides there is a fair prospect of the government giving me

I think now I shall spend all or a part of my senior vacation here. I have accepted an oration before the class to be delivered the morning after commencement. Henry Longfellow is to deliver a poem at the same time. The occasion will be so interesting - and the number of the outsiders so large that I think it my duty to make every exertion in my power to produce something worthy of both. Besides there is a fair prospect of the government giving me an invitation to spend a week with them to pay for the one I spent at Boston — I suppose you are quite busy at home as it haying time. This weather is well suited for that purpose but not very well adapted to study. My room is warm and uncomfortable, and the heat has been so oppressive for these some days past as to preclude everything like close and continued application — Even at this moment it is nearly 80 degrees though so early as 9 o'clock — the thermometer has stood as high as 100 twice this week.

I wish soon if you would write me soon. I feel anxious to know how your limb is doing, and whether Dr Smiths prophecy is like to be fulfilled
As soon as my part is done I intend to write father a long letter upon my the course I wish to pursue after commencement Give my love to all our family, mother & father in particular — From your affectionate brother
