

[blot]idgton, Nov. 6th, 1818.

Dear Sister.

The evening is far advanced. I have done nothing but write this afternoon, and you may well suppose my head to be drained of ideas; you must therefore excuse the brevity, of this letter, which will just suffice to let you know that that you still retain a place in my memory.

Well Nancy, how do you like being the oldest girl;? and How do you flourish in your domestic concerns? I often visit you in imagination; at least twice a day, morning, and evening.

I congratulate you, on the prospect you have of a school, at B. I hope you will all make great improvement. I know of nothing which deserves cultivation, so much as the human mind.

You will not be sorry that you did not come here before you had a school, as you will find yourself very very-deficient in english grammar, at least I do; besides you are now anticipating that pleasure, which I am enjoying, and which will soon be past; for time flies here with astonishing rapidity.

I must now wish you good night, and only request you to write me as often as you can find time, or take it.

Yours, Hannah.

Nancy
