

Portland Jan 10. 1835

Dear Bro.

I congratulate you very heartily upon your election, as well upon the general satisfaction which it seems to give. Your remarks on taking the chair are highly spoken of. Indeed, I think I never read any so appropriate and handsome. My daughter was much pleased with them. I hope you will be able to keep clear of attaching yourself to any of the factions which divide our party.

There is nothing new with us. We are all well, as are all our friends except Daniel who has scalded his wrist with hot water. We are all of us made very happy by the good fortune of Henry who has the offer of the professorship of Modern languages at Cambridge worth something more than $1500 per year. It is the place now filled by Mr Ticknor who will resign if Henry accepts.

As for my prospects I naturally feel feel anxious about them, & perhaps shall weary my friends with importunities. I feel that I am well qualified for the place, and want it. But I know the Preble & Augusta influence, unless the latter can be conciliated, will work hard against me. Your influence this winter will be considerable, and I know I need not repeat solicitations for you to exact it in my behalf. No noise, nor any display of exertion, but get the letters and signatures, & say to those who give them "keep quiet". Whenever you hear anything adverse to my hopes or particularly in favour of them do write me. Anne sends her love & wants to know how often Mary Booker comes to see you -

Yours &c. Geo. W. Pierce

Portland Jan 10. 1835

Dear Bro.

I congratulate you very heartily upon your election, as well upon the general satisfaction which it seems to give. Your remarks on taking the chair are highly spoken of. Indeed, I think I never read any so appropriate and handsome. Mr. Longfellow was much pleased with them. I hope you will be able to keep clear of attaching yourself to any of the factions which divide our party.

There is nothing new with us. We are all well, as are all our friends except Daniel who has scalded his wrist with hot water. We are all of us made very happy by the good fortune of Henry who has the offer of the proprietorship of Modern languages at Cambridge worth something more than $1500 per year. It is the place now filled by Mr Ticknor who will resign if Henry accepts.

As for my prospects I naturally feel feel anxious about them, & perhaps shall weary my friends with importunities. I feel that I am well qualified for the place, and want it. But I know the Preble & Augusta influence, unless the latter can be conciliated, will work hard against me. Your influences this winter will be considerable, and I know I need not repeat solicitations for you to exact it in my behalf. No noise, nor any display of exertion, but get the letters and signatures, & say to those who give them "keep quiet". Whenever you hear anything adverse to my hopes or particularly in favour of them do write me. Anne sends her love & wants to know how often Mary Booker comes to see you -

Yours &c. Geo. W. Pierce