

From the Eastern Argus of Monday, Nov. 16. 1835

"In the midst of life, we are in death."

Melancholy, indeed, and heart-rending, is the illustration of this solemn truth — now furnished to us and this community, in the death of a fellow-citizen — that we are called upon to announce.

George W. Pierce, Esq. of this city, died at his residence, on Cumberland Street, yesterday morning at about 7 o'clock, after a painful illness somewhat exceeding four weeks duration, aged 30 years within a few days.

We may truly say, that never has the demise of any young man in this city, or even elsewhere, been calculated to arouse the sympathies of friends, and to fill every mind with deep and impressive regrets, more vividly than does the death of the lamented subject of this notice.

From the Eastern Argus of Monday, Nov. 16. 1835

"In the midst of life, we are in death." Melancholy, indeed, and heart-rending, is the illustration of this solemn truth — now furnished to us and this community, in the death of a fellow-citizen — that we are called upon to announce.

George W. Pierce, Esq. of this city, died at his residence, on Cumberland Street, yesterday morning at about 7 o'clock, after a painful illness somewhat exceeding four weeks duration, aged 30 years within a few days.

We may truly say, that never has the demise of any young man in this city, or even elsewhere, been calculated to arouse the sympathies of friends, and to fill every mind with deep and impressive regrets, more vividly than does the death of the lamented subject of this notice.

He has been called from life, and all its high, honorable and agreeable associations — all of which were his — while the maturity of age, intellectual strength, of professional success and distinction, were just opening in joyousness upon him; at a moment when his own and his friends' high hopes of his personal happiness, and great usefulness to the public, began to be consummated, to the full gratification of them all; at a period, in fact, when life had begun to assume for him all the interest and charms that elevated virtue, eminent talents, and the most praiseworthy ambition could add to a state of most agreeable private associations.

Mr. Pierce was a native of Baldwin, in this County. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1825, studied the profession of law, in part under the tuition of the

he has been called from life and all its high, honorable and agreeable associations — all of which were his — while the maturity of age, intellectual strength, of professional success and distinction, were just opening in joyousness upon him; at a moment when his own and his friends' high hopes of his personal happiness, and great usefulness to the public, began to be consummated, to the full gratification of them all; at a period, in fact, when life had begun to assume for him all the interest and charms that elevated virtue, eminent talents, and the most praiseworthy ambition could add to a state of most agreeable private associations.

Mr. Pierce was a native of Baldwin, in this County — He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1825, studied the profession of law, in part under the tuition of the

Hon. Stephen Longfellow, and in part at the Law School in Northampton, Mass. He was admitted to the Bar in 1829, and immediately thereafter commenced the practice of Law in this city, where he continued to reside until his death - In 1833 he was one of the Representatives of this city in the State Legislature, where he distinguished himself in the estimation of all as a debater and legislator.

In the spring of the same year, he was appointed to the office of County Attorney for this (Cumberland) County - In the fall of 1833, by the earnest persuasion of political friends, he consented to vacate the office of County Attorney, the duties of which he discharged with entire satisfaction of the public, and to receive a re-election to the House of Representatives, in which body he again served as a Representative of this city during the

Hon. Stephen Longfellow, and in part at the Law School in Northampton, Mass. He was admitted to the Bar in 1829, and immediately thereafter commenced the practice of Law in this city, where he continued to reside until his death - In 1833 he was one of the Representatives of this city in the State Legislature, where he distinguished himself in the estimation of all as a debater and legislator.

In the spring of the same year, he was appointed to the office of County - Attorney for this (Cumberland) County - In the fall of 1833, by the earnest persuasion of political friends, he consented to vacate the office of County Attorney, the duties of which he discharged with entire satisfaction of the public, and to receive a re-election to the House of Representatives, in which body he again served as a Representative of this city during the session of 1834, with an increased reputation to himself, and with credit to his constituents.

In October last, a few days only previous to the commencement of his confinement by the disease which has terminated his earthly existence, he received from the Governor and Council, without opposition from any source or party, and by universal approbation, as it were, the honorable appointment of Reporter of Decisions in the Supreme Court of this State, then vacant.

Though eminently qualified in all the requisites for such an office, he was not spared to enter upon its responsible duties. Brighter prospects of fame in a favorite profession were never blasted by the insatiate hand of death, in any individual instance that has come within the range of our observation or knowledge. And although it is not for mortals to question the wisdom of an inscrutable Providence, even in a dispensation so fraught with session of 1834, with an increased reputation to himself, and with credit to his constituents.

In October last, a few days only previous to the commencement of his confinement by the disease which has terminated his earthly existence, he received from the Governor and Council, without opposition from any source or party, and by universal approbation, as it were, the honorable appointment of Reporter of Decisions in the Supreme Court of this State, then vacant.

Though eminently qualified in all the requisites for such an office, he was not spared to enter upon its responsible duties. Brighter prospects of fame in a favorite profession were never blasted by the insatiate hand of death, in any individual instance that has come within the range of our observation or knowledge – And although it is not for mortals to question the wisdom of an inscrutable Providence, even in a dispensation so fraught with 2.

both private and public calamity, it would be affectation in any one to regard an event so seemingly untimely as the death of such a man, with any other feelings than those of profound sorrow and regret, whether viewed in its private or its public bearings.

In his profession, Mr. Pierce early attained the rank of the most distinguished among the young men of the Bar in this County, and none bid fairer for the highest honors to which the talented jurist can aspire under our system of jurisprudence.

The readers of the Jurist and Law Magazine of New England have often been edified by the erudite productions of his pen, which invariably carried plenary evidence of the soundness of his judgment, and the assiduity of his researches into the beauties and deformities of the mystical though time-honored science of Law.

As a politician, few men, in any period

2.
both private and public calamity, it would be affectation in any one to regard an event so seemingly untimely as the death of such a man, with any other feelings than those of profound sorrow and regret, whether viewed in its private or its public bearings -

In his profession, Mr. Pierce early attained the rank of the most distinguished among the young men of the Bar in this County, and none bid fairer for the highest honors to which the talented jurist can aspire under our system of jurisprudence.

The readers of the Jurist and Law Magazine of New England have often been edified by the erudite productions of his pen, which invariably carried plenary evidence of the soundness of his judgment, and the assiduity of his researches into the beauties and deformities of the mystical though time-honored science of Law.

As a politician, few men, in any period

of our history, have, more successfully than himself, withstood the scathing scrutiny of opponents, or maintained higher claims to character for integrity, magnanimity and devotion to the public welfare. His first and every succeeding exercise of the elective franchise, so dear to the American Citizen, was on the side of republican principles; and he could justly claim the honor of being among the earliest in this State, who employed a persuasive pen to incline the minds of our fellow-citizens to a favorable consideration of the policy and administration then hoped for, and since then realized, in the election of Andrew Jackson to the Presidency.

In his private and social intercourse, no one knew him and loved him not - His amiability, and generous,

of our history, have, more successfully than himself, withstood the scathing scrutiny of opponents, or maintained higher claims to character for integrity, magnanimity and devotion to the public welfare. His first and every succeeding exercise of the elective franchise, so dear to the American Citizen, was on the side of republican principles; and he could justly claim the honor of being among the earliest in this State, who employed a persuasive pen to incline the minds of our fellow-citizens to a favorable consideration of the policy and administration then hoped for, and since then realized, in the election of Andrew Jackson to the Presidency-

In his private and social intercourse, no one knew him and loved him not - His amiability, and generous,

manly qualities, endeared him to every personal acquaintance, and independent of those feelings which are suffered to grow up more or less among all men, to the reproach of our better natures, from political differences of opinion alone, we believe he could not be said to have had an enemy in the world.

So agreeably, so justly, so honorably had he demeaned himself towards his fellow-men - As in private life he was beloved, and in public life honored, so in death is he lamented, by a wide community.

We understand that the funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon (Tuesday) at 3 o'clock, at his late residence, on Cumberland street -

manly qualities, endeared him to every personal acquaintance, and independent of those feelings which are suffered to grow up more or less among all men, to the reproach of our better natures, from political differences of opinion alone, we believe he could not be said to have had an enemy in the world.

So agreeably, so justly, so honorably had he demeaned himself towards his fellow-men - As in private life he was beloved, and in public life honored, so in death is he lamented, by a wide community.

We understand that the funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon (Tuesday) at 3 o'clock, at his late residence, on Cumberland street.