What could be more fitting than to apply to scholastic endeavor the motto of the Class of 1931—"Climb though the rocks be rugged"?

Although the students of today doubtless enjoy many advantages which those of former days had to do without, yet even now there is no royal road to learning. There are obstacles to be surmounted and the "rocks are rugged," but with a determination to succeed and a definite end in view, the goal will be surely and safely reached.

Editorial

This year marks the first graduation of a four-year class from Lincoln High School. We are very grateful to the citizens who made it possible for us to have a four-year high school for, if there were only a two-year course here, many could go no farther to school. A certificate has been received from the State of Maine Department of Education classing this as a Grade A school, measuring up to the state requirements for four-year secondary schools.

Since the school is larger, we are endeavoring to publish a magazine which will be an improvement over those of previous years. This, we fear, will be a difficult task, for preceding issues have set us a shining mark.
